Breaking News: Santa Stuck Up Chimney	Last night, the nation was in a state of shock as they found out that Santa had become stuck up a chimney. Unbelievably, everyone’s favourite fellow became lodged in the Smith family’s chimney after eating one too many mince pies. The nation was aghast. At the scene, TV cameras and local reporters began to gather. All they could see was two big, black boots pointing towards the sky. Disappointingly, the rescue took much longer than planned. Completely exhausted, Father Christmas was pulled from the chimney in a filthy state after the three-hour ordeal. “Maybe I’ll start using doors instead,” he proposed, clearly embarrassed by the media attention. Example answers: As they slept, the Smith family heard banging coming from the fireplace. Quickly, they phoned the fire brigade to free him. Covered in dust, Santa sneezed all of the soot out of his nose. Clearly embarrassed, his cheeks turned a bright shade of red.
The Queen’s Speech	Queen Elizabeth appeared into the room at her spectacular, exquisite palace. Her crown glistened in the lights set up for the filming. “Good day to you all,” she greeted as she approached the throne on which she would make her speech. “I wish to introduce myself to you,” she said humbly. “I am Elizabeth. What is your name?” she asked, looking right at me. I did not know what to do. I bowed politely and whispered, “My name is Steven, Your Majesty.” I almost did not dare to look at her so I lowered my gaze. The glorious queen began her speech saying, “My dear citizens...”
